WE OFFER INTENSIVE RESEARCH AND CLINICAL TRAINING OPPORTUNITIES...

Diversity of Applicants

The Rutgers University PhD Psychology program seeks a diverse applicant pool. We welcome applications from under-represented ethnic minorities, women, applicants with disabilities, first-generation college graduates, and non-traditional students. We regularly admit students who were not psychology majors as undergraduates, who are not applying to graduate school straight out of college, and/or are pursuing psychology as a second career. Fellowships are available to under-represented minorities and students with economically disadvantaged backgrounds.

HOW DO I APPLY?

Where

- Applications are submitted on-line to the Rutger's School of Graduate Studies

What

Required Application Materials:

- Undergraduate transcripts
- Graduate transcripts, for applicants with prior graduate work
- GRE scores (verbal, quantitative, and writing. The psychology subject test is not required.)
- TOEFL scores for applicants with a native language other than English
- Personal statement describing research interests. It is essential to include the names of faculty members with whom the applicant would like to work.
- Three letters of recommendation

When

- Applications for admission in September are due December 15 of the previous year. In some cases, late applications can be considered.
- Clinical Psychology Interview Day TBD, by Invitation Only

Rutgers Clinical Psychology Ph.D. Program Diversity Fellowship

The Rutgers School of Graduate Studies is pleased to offer annual Diversity Fellowships to talented incoming students from a wide variety of backgrounds. These fellowships are designed to help Rutgers recruit and retain excellent graduate students from underrepresented groups.

Award: $25,000 stipend for the first year, tuition remission, and health insurance

Website: <https://gsnb.rutgers.edu/awards/diversity-fellowships>

Eligibility: First-year Ph.D. applicants are eligible for nomination

Application Process:

- Nominations must be submitted by Graduate Program Directors only between January and February of each year
- Faculty Evaluators drawn from the humanities, social sciences, and STEM fields review a subset of candidates in their respective areas and make their recommendations to the Graduate School's Selection Committee.
- The Selection Committee aggregates the faculty recommendations and determines the overall rankings for the entire applicant pool.
